

The familiar thought of “providing a roof over your head” takes on a different meaning for those who own or manage a multi-family residential property. You are responsible for maintaining a roof over many people’s heads, which is a vital part of your property. As a roof gets closer to the end of its lifespan, problems like surface bowing, cracking, sand or particles in your gutters and complaints from residents of leaking begin happening more often. Trying to piecemeal repair after repair can get expensive. When does it make sense to simply replace the roof especially to avoid further property damage and unpleasant legal situations? The experts at Red Stick Roofing of Louisiana can help.
